

THE EDGE

When Mark Davis, an avid Ohio State fan, made plans with his family to travel to Antarctica, he didn't know that Ohio State would be in the Fiesta Bowl. After all, they had not been in the national championships since he was born in 1968. So,

Smith, and sister Melinda, a Michigan fan, walked the deck aboard the Marco Polo along with about 800 other passengers, Mark, the only Buckeye fan aboard, paid 75 cents per minute to watch play by play messages of the big game. Unfortunately, the connection was lost in the fourth quarter when Miami scored, so Mark assumed his law school alma mater had lost. It wasn't until Mark returned home that he learned that Ohio State won.

A LONG WAY AWAY: Mark Davis wants Antarctica's creatures to know that Ohio State is the champion.
